Gays Meet With Representatives

SUCCESS IN WASHINGTON

On October 14, 50,000 to 75,000 gay people, including 12 Bloomington residents, gathered in Washington D.C. to express their concern for the rights of the nation's gay population.

"It was a tremendously emotional experience," said BGA chairperson Lewis Ryker, a participant in the march. "I felt great highs and great lows in the same week. It was a draining experience."

The goal of the march was to show gay strength and sense of community and to voice support for House Bill 2074 which would guarantee the civil rights of gay people.

Dennis Wilcoxson, BGA treasurer, agreed that the march was highly successful. He said it proved that "there is a very well organized group that is interested in a whole spectrum of things, including ... lobbying."

Ryker said the day after the march was dedicated to lobbying. The Indiana delegation saw all of its congressional representatives.

"It's the first time gay people had come to speak to them," Ryker said. "They wanted to know more about us. We've opened the door now. It's just the beginning. We're going to make ourselves heard."

Ryker said the group met personally with Senator Lugar and spoke with Representative John Meyer's aid Ray Little, who, Ryker said, was less than interested.

Reelected mayor prefers not to proclaim Gay Pride Week '80

COLLIN C. SCHWOYER

This year, the tenth anniversary of the Stonewall riots which have been called the beginning of the modern struggle for gay rights, the BGA asked the mayor of Bloomington to proclaim June 17 through 24 "Gay Pride Week." The proclamation was not made. Gay people, as a rule, did not complain; the mayor faced a conservative in the November elections.

Mayor McCloskey did, however, attend the Gay Pride Week picnic in Cascades Park, and gay people were able to talk with him about their concerns.

Indiana has gay people

"It's time to stop reacting to events and time to start thinking about where we're going," Jane Levin, a national gay lobbyist and Midwest representative from the Gay March of Washington, told the Indiana Gay/Lesbian Conference that met in Bloomington on Feb. 16.

Levin told the 50 persons attending the conference, which she said was the largest state conference she had attended, "Without an articulated goal of where we're going, we'll never get anywhere. We had this big successful march that no one predicted and now what? No National movement has come out of it."

Levin claimed that the local gay/lesbian organizations are the foundations of a national movement. "The march (on Washington) was, in a real sense, a grass root effort. We are the people who are going to decide where the movement goes," Levin said.

The lobbyist complained that there is no national policy on gay and lesbian issues and, she added, "There is no future unless we make one."

The Midwest will have the strongest delegation to the national gay/lesbian conference at Oberlin College because it is being held in the Midwest," she predicted.

Michael Sedberry, coordinator for the Indiana Lobbying effort, spoke about the importance of involvement by all gay people in the struggle for gay rights. He also said that the absence of a law that discriminates can be just as good as having a law that prevents discrimination. He said that when the Indiana penal code was revised, sodomy was just quietly left out.
